

CATASTROPHIC ACCIDENTS

OVERVIEW

We have over 50 years experience in defending industrial, automotive and aviation clients in major, bet-the-company litigation regarding catastrophic accidents. Because these claims are fact-intensive and involve a complex web of details that often lead to multiple causation factors, we specialize in conducting an early fact and technical investigation.

We rely on a network of experienced experts to engage in an evidence-based evaluation of the facts to determine the factors leading to the catastrophic accident. Our early focus allows us to position our clients for a successful defense, while also serving to inform our clients if there is a need for any process improvements or structural change. We are mindful of the political and media implications and prepare our strategy with the larger goal of understanding our client.

Our team has an active role defending manufacturing and leading industrial companies. We have represented automotive and trucking companies in a wide array of product liability and catastrophic accidents, including the world's largest rental fleet companies. Our aviation practice has defended aircraft manufacturers, component part makers, fixed-base operators/ground handlers, and airports domestically and around the world. Finally, we have represented large trucking and railcar companies in catastrophic accidents, train derailment, and chemical or content spills.
